FOUR TENNESSEANS TO COMPETE IN INAUGURAL US ADAPTIVE OPEN

PINEHURST, N.C. — In a few weeks, four Tennesseans will make history. They'll become the first golfers to ever play in the U.S. Adaptive Open. The USGA is hosting the first tournament of its kind at Pinehurst No. 6 from July 18-20.

"I'm really proud of the USGA and their willingness to kind of move the needle here in terms of adaptive golf," Jordan Thomas, a Nashville-native and multiple-limb amputee said. "So often we talk about growing the game and expanding the game and making it available to more and more people that needs to include people with physical disabilities."

The Inaugural U.S. Adaptive Open is a tremendous opportunity for these extraordinary golfers to showcase their talents on the national stage. For them it's a chance to shift how adaptive golf is often viewed today.

"We adaptive golfers are trying to get adaptive golf out of the, 'oh, this is a cool video' on a certain instagram account to, 'Hey, these guys are actually really good and can play and compete at the highest levels,'" Alex Fourie, a Knoxville resident and who was born without his right arm, said.

96 adaptive golfers are set to arrive at Pinehurst later this month, four of them from the Volunteer State. They'll compete in different impairment categories, made up of at least five men and two women in each. With the event on the national stage, the world of adaptive golf will get to connect with golfers like never before and at the same time adaptive golfers from around the world will get to relate with each other.
